Product Alert

DESCRIPTION AND PURPOSE:

ON Semiconductor wishes to notify you of a potential manufacturability concern with SOT-23 devices. This problem is very customer board mounting specific and you may not experience any issue with these parts. ON Semiconductor believes in proactively notifying our customers of any potential issue.

Background of potential manufacturing concern:

This issue is very process specific and is not a reliability concern as it only affects the initial board mount process for those customers using double-sided boards with wave solder. A few of ON Semiconductor's customers have reported an issue with SOT-23 devices under these conditions only. The reported issue may occur during board mounting using wave solder after gluing the devices to the bottom side of the board resulting in components falling off of the board.

Date codes affected:

SOT-23 devices from date code 0814

ON Semiconductor actions:

ON Semiconductor has identified the issue to be related to:

1. Customer mounting process

Again, this issue only affects customers using SOT-23 components for bottom side board placement that are glued into place prior to wave solder. Any components used for top side placement or normal IR Furnace pass will not be affected by this issue. Glue types used also have an impact.

2. Mold compound variability from date code 0814

ON Semiconductor has performed adhesion testing and has verified transient variability in adhesion strength since the original qualification of the mold compound. ON Semiconductor is working with our mold compound supplier to understand this variability and correct it.

Product Bulletin #16134

3. Surface finish of parts

Parts with a smooth bottom surface finish have been attributed with higher failure rates as compared to failure rates of parts with a matte finish. A matte finish has more surface area for the glue to adhere to as compared to a part with a smooth surface. As a containment action, ON Semiconductor has placed shipment holds on any inventories of smooth parts and has notified some customers who have received smooth parts.

We also suspended manufacturing on mold systems that produce smooth parts to have those mold systems enhanced to produce parts with a matte surface finish. These containment actions have temporarily affected our capacity but have been resolved and we have returned to full capacity.

The enhanced matte surface is designed to overcome any variability of the mold compound and aids in a containment action until we can eliminate that variability.

What to do next?

If you have consumed product starting from date code 0814 and have not experienced any component placement issues on your boards, you should not be affected. Product reliability is not a concern as parts either solder normally or they don't.

If you have a manufacturing process that consists of gluing these components to the bottom side of a board in a wave solder process and have experienced components falling off boards with a greater than normal frequency, please contact your ON Semiconductor Customer Service Representative or Salesperson to facilitate product replacement or contact a technical representative to further discuss the issue for containment or other actions.
